

Gary Teh <garyjob@agroverse.shop>

Fwd: Fortunato Chocolate 1.1 Pound Bars Are Coming Back

2 messages

Kirsten Ritschel <kirsten@kikiscocoa.com>

Tue, May 19 at 8:19 PM

To: Gary Teh <garyjob@agroverse.shop>

Some interesting details about these chocolate distributors and their process for delivering chocolate they love. They partner with Max Felchlin AG in Switzerland, a renowned facility known for producing high-quality chocolate. They have become my primary source whenever I am unable to source chocolate from Jenny in Ecuador.

----- Forwarded message -----

From: Fortunato Chocolate <adam-fortunatochocolate.com@shared1.ccsend.com>

Date: Tue, May 19, 2026 at 4:37 PM

Subject: Fortunato Chocolate 1.1 Pound Bars Are Coming Back

To: <kirsten@kikiscocoa.com>

Hi ,

This is Adam Pearson from Fortunato Chocolate, with some good news.

Because of popular demand, we are bringing back our 1.1-pound bars.

All three varieties, 68% Dark, 47% Dark Milk, and 36% Milk, are now available for pre-order.

These are the exact same 1.1-pound bars that we made for 15 years straight prior to temporarily discontinuing them early last year due to a dramatic increase in cacao prices over the last two years.

They will be made with the exact same thought to be extinct variety of cacao from the northern Peruvian jungle and will be manufactured exactly the same as before.

Nothing has changed except for the year of the cacao harvest.

I am going to provide additional information below, but if you don't want to read anymore because you already know you'd like to make a pre-order, you can do so by visiting this page: <https://fortunatochocolate.com/collections/pre-order-1-1-pound-bars>.

The cost is $33 per 1.1-pound bar.

There is no minimum or maximum order.

Now, for the additional information.

This is a pre-order with an estimated delivery date of November 2026.

The cacao that will be used in these exquisite bars is currently on trees in the northern Peruvian jungle in a place called the District of Huarango, waiting to be harvested.

The cacao harvest will run through the middle of July.

From now until the end of the harvest, our team will visit cacao farms to buy cacao from our hundreds of farm partners who farm this particular heirloom variety of cacao called Pure

Nacional.

We will process the cacao in our company's post-harvest processing facility, where we ferment and dry the cacao ourselves according to strict protocols that we've developed during our 18 years in business, engineered with the singular goal of making the most delicious chocolate possible.

We expect the pre-order option to remain open until the end of the harvest.

Once the harvest is complete, around the beginning of August, we will ship our cacao from the jungle, through and over the northern Andes mountains, and down the coast to Lima.

From Lima, the cacao will travel via boat, north and then east through the Panama Canal, across the Atlantic, through the English Channel into the North Sea to the port of Rotterdam in The Netherlands.

From Rotterdam, on river barges and then freight trucks, the cacao will head due south into the Swiss Alps to the small, lovely mountain town of Schwyz, Switzerland, home of our long-time chocolate-making partner Max Felchlin A.G.

We, along with many top dessert professionals around the world, believe that Max Felchlin A.G. is the finest chocolate maker on the planet.

They have been making chocolate for more than 110 years, utilizing a unique blend of modern equipment and slow, vintage craft machines.

It takes roughly 5 weeks to ship cacao from Peru to Schwyz.

We'd expect the cacao to be converted into wonderful chocolate during a window of three to four weeks.

After that, the chocolate will be shipped via freight truck to Brussels, Belgium.

From there, it will come on a boat, back through the English Channel, across the Atlantic, back through the Panama Canal, and up the west coast of the United States to the port of Seattle.

The chocolate will take three to four weeks by boat from Brussels to Seattle.

From the port of Seattle, it will travel 30 minutes due east to our chocolate kitchen in the little town of Issaquah, WA.

And from Issaquah, we will ship it to your home.

All that for $33 per 1.1-pound bar.

We go through all of this to make the best chocolate that we can possibly make.

Now I must give you a few caveats.

As you can see, the process is long, complex, and covers a lot of geography, and we are living in fairly unpredictable times.

We are willing to guarantee the product price and carry the risk of rising cacao prices and international shipping costs.

However, there is nothing we can do if war breaks out, or if there are oil shortages that cause ships not to sail, or if governments change the customs procedures in a way that causes delays.

If all goes more or less as it has the last 30 or so times we've done this (2 times a year on average for 15 years straight), we feel confident that the chocolate will arrive by November of 2026.

But we cannot guarantee it.

What we can do is keep you up to date with frequent updates as the cacao and chocolate make their journey from northern Peru to your home.

And we can guarantee that you will get the chocolate you paid for as soon as humanly possible.

We will work our tails off to make that happen.

It is what we love to do and what we have spent the last 18 years learning to do well.

Another caveat.

We will only leave the pre-order option open for as long as we feel we can purchase enough cacao to satisfy the orders.

We already have an idea about how much cacao we can buy.

There are no minimum orders and no maximum limitations.

You can buy one bar, or one hundred, or even one thousand.

It will be first come first serve until we reach what we believe is maximum capacity.

Feel free to let your friends and family members know about it, too.

But I'd advise you not to wait too long.

Finally, we aren't going to charge you for shipping on the pre-order, but we are likely to charge a small shipping fee in November when we ship your order.

We just don't know what is going to happen with gas and shipping prices.

Ideally, it will be very small, maybe $5 - $10.

We may even do it for free if gas prices permit.

But if gas prices go up, we'll likely have to charge something.

You'll get a shipping invoice from us before shipping, and once it is paid, we'll ship.

I promise you that under no circumstances will we gouge you on shipping.

We want you to come back and order with us every single year!
We won't ruin the experience right at the end by being unfair with shipping costs.

Ok, that is everything that I can think of.

If you have any questions whatsoever about how this is going to work or how to proceed, my contact information is below.

Please send me an email or give me a call, and I will do my best to be of service.

If I don't answer your call, I am probably in one of our chocolate shops or on the other line.

Leave me a message, and I promise I will call you back.

Here is the link, again, to place your pre-order:

<https://fortunatochocolate.com/collections/pre-order-1-1-pound-bars>.

Thank you so much for your time.

Have a great day.

Best,

Adam

Co-Owner

Fortunato Chocolate

www.fortunatochocolate.com

Phone: 425-657-6637

Email: adam@fortunatochocolate.com

www.fortunatochocolate.com | 1375 NW Mall St Suite 6 | Issaquah, WA 98027 US

Unsubscribe | Update Profile | Constant Contact Data Notice

Try email & social marketing for free!

Gary Teh <garyjob@agroverse.shop>
To: Kirsten Ritschel <kirsten@kikiscocoa.com>

Tue, May 19 at 11:11 PM

Thank you for sharing 🙏🏻
[Quoted text hidden]