

Email Archive — Buddhist Boondockers Outreach

From: Gary Teh <garyjob@agroverse.shop>
To: Max McGillivray <max.mcgillivray@a24prod.com>
Subject: Introduction — Buddhist Boondockers (via Stacey)
Sent: 2026-07-14 12:35 PDT
Msg ID: 19f621f651a80d0d

Hi Max,

Stacey Polacco suggested I reach out — I'm joining the Buddhist Boondockers camp, and she mentioned you'd like to connect with a few of the participants ahead of filming.

A little about me: alongside the meditation practice, I bring people together around cacao — we roast the beans, brew hot chocolate, and share it as a community. It's a simple, hands-on way to slow down and connect, and I'll be hosting those sessions at the camp.

The cacao ties into work I care deeply about: helping restore the Amazon rainforest through regenerative cacao farming — the mission behind Agroverse, a community I help steward. Much of what I do is coordinating that supply chain across farmers and partners spread across the rainforest, and honestly that's where I've learned the most about community and conflict. Getting people with different needs and incentives to move together toward something regenerative is the same question as keeping any group whole when tensions arise — just at a different scale. Stacey mentioned that's exactly the thread you're interested in exploring.

I'd love to hop on a Zoom whenever works for you. Happy to share more about the practice, the cacao sessions, and the work in the Amazon.

Warmly, Gary

Archived record of an outreach email sent from garyjob@agroverse.shop. Introduction to filmmaker Max McGillivray (A24/HBO documentary re: Buddhist Boondockers), surfacing Agroverse's Amazon rainforest regeneration mission. Referred by Stacey Polacco.