How do we teach a child where their chocolate comes from — without lecturing them?

Every child has eaten chocolate.

Almost none have met the forest it grew in, the farmer who tended the cacao, or the hands that shaped it.

*What if a chocolate bar came with a companion, a story,
and a way to become part of the story?*

A little alien. A child's companion. A tool for wonder.

3 / 18

Aora is a curiosity companion — a small alien explorer who arrives on Earth to discover the world alongside a child. Every Aora is unique, born from a photo the child takes of something that sparks their interest: a leaf, a pet, a favorite animal.

Explore Agroverse

A real place. A real forest. A real chocolate bar.

Small-scale cacao farmers in the Amazon rainforest, growing chocolate the old way — under the shade of many trees, alongside fruit, birds, and butterflies.

Every bar is traced to a specific farm and a specific farmer. A QR code on every wrapper links to the exact grove.

Every bar plants a tree back in the rainforest. Farmers are paid directly and fairly — no middlemen.

Where the chocolate grows

Two family farms in Bahia, Brazil. One story per wrapper.

Oscar's Farm

Bahia · 2024

Three generations of cacao wisdom.
Oscar's grandfather planted the vision;
Oscar carries it forward today.

Flavor

Deep. Buttery. Earthy. Full-bodied.

The taste of patience passed down.

Fazenda Santa Ana

Bahia · 2023

A regenerative farm where biodiversity is the method. Traditional fermentation, old family knowledge.

Flavor

Nutty and bright. Smooth earth.

Finishes like coffee-mocha.

Your child's Aora is about to visit the Agroverse — and come home with a story, a chocolate bar, and a seed.

Kids step into a Toy Story–style adventure inside the chocolate supply chain, meeting farmers and forest characters and creating stories that get voted onto real chocolate bars.

Every child receives a free personalized storybook. Every story is traced and rewarded — just like a farmer's cacao. Top contributors see their Aora art printed on the next batch of wrappers.

Four moves, from free to featured

How your family joins the story.

1

Meet Your Aora

Bring your existing Aora, or create one free. Borrow a gift from an Amazon animal — jaguar courage, sloth patience, macaw curiosity.

2

Get Your Story

A free personalized 12-page illustrated story arrives, starring your child's Aora. Share it. Gift it. Print it.

3

Share & Vote

Every story enters a public gallery. Hearts, shares, and features are all tracked on the Aora ledger — your child is credited.

4

Get Your Aora on the Bar

Top contributors win their Aora art on limited-edition wrappers, their story as a fold-out insert, and a page in the sticker book.

Same rail. Same ethic. Same belief.

Aora teaches children to notice nature.

Agroverse is the piece of nature that most needs noticing.

Aora credits creators automatically.

Agroverse credits farmers transparently.

Both close the loop instead of consuming it.

A child who reads this story and eats this chocolate doesn't just learn about the Amazon.

They have, for one afternoon, been part of it.
